Vital link.

Selecting a Breeze-Eastern Rescue Hoist System is an investment in mission effectiveness, and the right training completes the package. Enroll your flight line teams in a special two-day class that keeps you on course. This OEM flight line safety and maintenance training is for newly purchased systems – or as a refresher course for seasoned crews. It's key to ensuring that your team is properly trained to operate your Breeze-Eastern Rescue Hoist System. And you'll know that when a call comes in for your life-saving services, your equipment will be ready, too.

Breeze-Eastern is the world's only dedicated helicopter hoist and winch provider.

OEM Flight Line Safety & Maintenance Training

BE READY.

Our two-day Flight Line Safety & Maintenance classes are taught by a Breeze-Eastern expert in flight line operations who knows your system inside and out.

Students spend one full day in the classroom and one full day performing hands-on practical training. Every student is taught the proper procedures required to maintain your rescue hoist per the recommended Original Equipment Manufacturer Specifications.

Hands-on Learning: During hands-on and practical training sessions, students are guided through 3-month, 6-month and 1-year inspections, as well as review of the correct cable- and hook-changing procedures.

Students receive a certificate confirming that they have completed OEM Flight Line Safety and Maintenance training for your specific Breeze-Eastern product.

BE CONFIDENT.

When it comes to saving lives with your rescue hoist, there is no room for shortcuts – and the mission isn't over until everyone makes it home safely. With training, you'll see the benefits of increased mission readiness and reliability, an increased sense of trust and confidence in the equipment and your team's ability to do the job correctly, and an increased focus on safety.

Fact: An unnecessary repair due to lack of training can cost you six-to-eight times your investment in our comprehensive training course. It's a prudent, cost-saving measure you can apply before you get your new hoist system – or a powerful refresher course to keep your trained flight line team at peak efficiency.
